Museum acquires antique clock collection

[P1] A private collector has donated more than sixty antique clocks to a museum in Dorin. The oldest item is a wooden wall clock with a hand-painted face, and the newest dates from the early part of the last century.

[P2] Staff will spend the winter cleaning and cataloguing the collection. Several clocks still work, but most will be displayed with their mechanisms stopped to reduce wear.

[P3] The museum plans to open a small exhibition in the spring. A clockmaker has offered to give a public talk about repair techniques, and the museum is looking for volunteers to help record the collection.
